CONDUCTED BY THE EMPLOYER:

Tuberculosis survey 1 for new employees and interns in the social welfare and health care sector and early childhood education

Tuberculosis is a bacterial disease that usually affects the lungs. It is infectious through airborne transmission. Without treatment, the disease may become severe and lead to death. Preventing the spread of the disease is important, as small children in particular may develop a serious condition. In Finland, any examinations, treatment and medication for tuberculosis are free of charge for the patient.

Tuberculosis is particularly infectious indoors. Early detection and effective treatment of those who have tuberculosis prevents the disease from spreading. This also promotes the well-being of the patient's immediate circle and maintains the work ability of employees.

The Finnish Communicable Diseases Act (Section 55) stipulates that the employer must require a reliable statement from an employee working in social welfare or health care units or caring for children under school age, ensuring that he or she does not have respiratory tuberculosis. A statement must also be obtained from trainees and other similar persons working in the facility without an employment contract.

The statement must be provided before starting in a new position if the previous examination took place more than 2 years ago.

The statement must also be provided during the employment contract if the employee may have been exposed to tuberculosis when, for example, travelling in an area where tuberculosis is common. Because of this, it is important that you let your employer know if you may have been exposed to tuberculosis during your employment contract. It is also important that you always seek medical attention if you have a cough that lasts longer than 3 weeks or your symptoms include mucus arising from the lungs.

THIS SURVEY IS part of this statutory statement and its purpose is to promote your health and that of your immediate circle and to stop an infectious disease from spreading. The employer has the right to process a person's health data with the person's consent according to the Act on the Protection of Privacy in Working Life, the Occupational Health Care Act and the Data Protection Act. Your answers will remain confidential. If you do not wish to take this survey, you can obtain a certificate of your tuberculosis status from occupational health services, a health centre or a private clinic and deliver it to your employer before starting work.
